The Opportunity...
The Office of Child Development is offering an opportunity for students to get hands-on experience cleaning, organizing, and running descriptives on data collected as part of a longitudinal community-engaged research initiative. This initiative is called the 3Rs: Reading, Racial Equity, and Relationships, and is co-led by Dr. Shannon Wanless & Shallegra Moye, as part of the Pittsburgh Study. (https://www.ocd.pitt.edu/programs-services/pittsburgh-study-early-school-age-cohort). This opportunity is available for Spring 2022 and/or Summer 2022.

Students will be part of the Evaluation and Research Team (ERT), mentored by Dr. Amanda Cross, Dr. Sharon Labao, and Dr. Shannon Wanless. With the guidance and support of ERT researchers, students will work together to prepare data and codebooks to be used for technical reports, community-based decision making, and program development. Independent study credit with Dr. Wanless is available.

Eligibility...
Pitt undergraduate or graduate students from any discipline are eligible for this opportunity. Experience in research methods or using statistical software would be helpful. Students will receive specialized training and should be organized and feel comfortable working independently.

In alignment with the mission and goals of the Office of Child Development, this placement also requires a commitment to social justice, cultural humility and to working in genuine partnership with community-based agencies that promote wellness and learning in marginalized populations.
